Administration Plans to Make Sincere Effort, However

AFTER "BIG" VIOLATORS

Local Officials Will Have To Deal With The
"Minnows"

By George R. Holmes
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Mar. 24.—A "rule of reason" was laid down today by Attorney General Homer S. Cummings, as the yard-stick by which prohibition enforcement is to be measured in the new administration.

So long as the 18th amendment remains in the Constitution, the Administration will make a sincere effort to enforce its provisions, but the hard-boiled methods of other years are out.

The prohibition bureau, under the direction of Amos W. W. Woodcock will continue its quest of "big" violators and leave to local officers and local public sentiment, the job of dealing with the "minnows" and speak-easies.

In applying the so-called rule of reason to the newly legalized beer industry, the Attorney General made it known that:

1. Newspapers may accept advertising of the new 3.2 beverage before the effective date of its manufacture and sale, the Post Office Department has been notified not to bar any publication because it carries beer advertising.

2. A study has been begun to determine how many men are now serving time in Federal prison for violation of the Volstead Act, affecting beer. If they can be segregated, consideration will be given to their release.

3. Brewers may proceed fully with their plans and preparation for the (Continued on page 4)

What, No Swastika?

Immaculately attired in morning clothes and top hat, Chancellor Adolf Hitler, Germany's Nazi dictator, is pictured as he left the memorial services for the nation's war dead, held in Berlin recently. This is one of the few pictures of Hitler without his brown shirt, ornamented with the Nazi swastika emblem which has now become a symbol on the national flag.

NEW NAZI REGIME PLANS NEW DEAL FOR GERMANY

Resentful of Criticism Abroad
—Down to Big Business

TO 'REVIVE' THE NATION

BERLIN, Mar. 24.—(INS)—Resentful of criticism abroad, the new Nazi dictatorial regime settled down to give Germany a "new deal" today.

With Chancellor Adolf Hitler entrenched as dictator and undisputed master of the Reich by vote of the "Swastika Reichstag," the nation settled down to the business of carving out a new destiny under guidance of a "German Mussolini."

Hitler, whose accession to supreme power meant achievement of the ambition toward which he struggled for more than a decade, wasted no time in pressing forward with his campaign for revival of the nation.

THE ABSENT-MINDED PARKER

By the Stroller

She works at the Gray Line Hosiery Company mill, and although few things worry her, she almost turned gray the other day.

The habit has been to park her car in front of the mill building, and when it was time to leave one evening recently the "driver" couldn't be found. Up and down she paced, tearing her hair, and bemoaning her loss. After seeking for some time she started to walk home, inwardly cursing automobile thieves, car snatchers, machine robbers, and any others of that ilk.

The young woman had not gone far when she heard a call, and was beckoned back by a fellow employee, who obligingly pointed to the car at the rear of the mill where the owner had parked it in the morning, and then proceeded to forget its whereabouts.

BURIAL SATURDAY FOR WOMAN WHO TOOK HER LIFE

Belief is That Daughter Had Narrow Escape From Death

AXE FOUND BY OFFICERS

Woman Thought to Have Suffered A Mental Spell

Burial of Mrs. Auguste Kasparitis, who took her life in her Bensalem Township home, one mile from Newportville, Wednesday evening, will occur tomorrow. The funeral service for the middle-aged woman, who severed her jugular vein and wind-pipe following an alleged attack upon her daughter, Mary, 18, will occur tomorrow at two p. m. from the funeral parlors of Charles Haefner, Hulmeville. Burial will be made in Beechwood Cemetery.

The daughter, Mary, whom it is believed had a narrow escape from death at the hands of her mother, who apparently suffered from a temporary mental derangement, is now at the home of her uncle in Croydon. Last evening she was joined there by her sister, Elsie, 21, of Philadelphia. In addition to these two another daughter, Anna, 31, survives the woman. The husband of the deceased, George Kasparitis, died about six years ago.

The woman apparently plunged the knife into her throat as she lay upon her bed on the first floor of the farmhouse where she and her daughter, Mary, resided. The bed-clothing was saturated with her life-blood. In reconstructing the act it was thought by officers that Mrs. Kasparitis took a pillow from the bed, made her way to the cellar door, groped her way downstairs, removed her house-slippers, and placing the pillow on the dirt floor lay upon it.

When the body was discovered there were small streams and pools of blood about it. The woman's slippers were placed side by side at the base of the steps. Close to the body were two knives, a butcher knife and a Boy Scout knife. A gash, three to four inches in length, was in the throat.

Although the daughter, Mary, was not certain up until yesterday morning what implement her mother had used in striking her over the head, officers yesterday found an axe in the room where the attack upon the girl occurred. On it were signs of blood. It is believed that the mother after striking the girl with the axe made for the knife with the intention of killing the young woman. Yesterday in recounting the affair Mary said "I went to my writing desk to do some drawing. Mother left the room, and when she came in again I felt something hit my head. I don't know what she used, it felt like a board or a baseball bat... then everything went black and I fell to the floor. I was only there a second or two when I realized what had happened, but I thought I better play 'dead' or she might hit me again." (Continued on page 3)

1. The Executive Committee of the School Directors' Association and the County Superintendent shall form a committee to merge any fourth class districts into larger units. All districts having less than 1000 population shall, however, be merged or annexed to larger districts prior to the first Monday of July, 1935. The Department of Public Instruction may also suggest mergings.

3. When fourth class districts are annexed to first, second or third class districts, the president and vice-president of the annexed district shall become members of the school board until the expiration of their term. When fourth class districts are merged, the terms of all school directors thus affected shall terminate. The Court shall appoint from the members of the school boards thus affected five members who shall serve until the next election of school directors.

However, if the directors of the present districts enter into an amicable agreement, the school directors of the enlarged district may levy upon one or more such merged districts a special tax to apply on said indebtedness. Upon the failure of the boards of such affected districts to reach an amicable agreement on the question of indebtedness, the Court shall appoint upon petition of the school directors of any such affected districts upon petition of twenty-five freeholders thereof, a disinterested commission to apportion such an indebtedness.

CAMPAIGN A FAILURE

The "buy-British" movement which was launched with the expectation that it would prove an important factor in the revival of British trade, has proved a disappointment to at least one of its originators.

Sir Edward Crowe, who as a member of the empire marketing board was among the initiators of the campaign, recently declared in an address before a group of business men: "I think probably the buy-British campaign has gone far enough. We want to buy American goods and we want America to buy British goods."

The attempt made in the United States to launch a "buy-American" movement is destined to prove as futile in assisting business back to a normal level as has the drive in Britain. It apparently has not attained much strength, nor does it seem likely to do this. Failure of Americans to respond more generally than they have done does not reflect upon their loyalty to home industries. They know that if Americans don't buy foreign goods, foreigners can't or will not buy American goods.

The truth of this principle is beginning to be impressed upon the British.

LET THE WOMEN ANSWER

Do men or women make better school teachers?

This question has been raised by Dean Louis T. Moore of the University of Cincinnati graduate school. Dean Moore gives his support to the men, but that his view will not be accepted unanimously by educators or laymen is certain.

Women teachers, said the Cincinnati head, speaking of them as a class, are more interested in getting married than in teaching; they lack the intellectual patience of men, and contribute to making students "undisciplined and flabby." He believes one of "the most flagrant flaws" in the American school system is to be found in the fact women occupy a predominant position in the teaching profession.

The dean has raised a question which will only cause a lot of futile discussion. There are good and bad teachers among both men and women members of the profession. Which if either class is better than the other is something that can't be decided.

Dean Moore probably enjoys a controversy. If so, he is facing a very pleasant time.

People who marry for love don't do it again soon.

Fine motto: Listen to reason—reason when you listen.

Apple growers will spend a million to sell the "apple a day" idea to the world. Eve accomplished it without spending a cent.

American cities are in no danger of imitating the fall of Rome. Rome had more bathtubs than telephones, while our cities have more telephones than bathtubs.

When the Great Orator entertains grave doubts about the accuracy of his premise but doesn't care to stoop to any haggling over its truth, he says it is the Consensus of Opinion.

While Her Husband PLAYED AROUND

Mary Faith was on the job, eight hours a day—and some evenings, too—flattering, cajoling, waiting on and taking dictation from the man who had been the greatest rival for her hand.

She believed that because she loved her man so much, everything would turn out right. But she knew what could happen...

CHAPTER FORTY-EIGHT

The shot had been fired high to draw their attention. The ball crashed into the palm trees beyond them. And now, as they looked, they saw the reefed foretopsail being raised and lowered. Monsieur de Bernis, with his eyes upon that signalling, was quietly counting.

"It is a call to send a boat."

They turned to him again for direction. He took command, quite naturally. "We must obey, or we shall be swept with langrel. Some of you launch the longboat. See to it, Halliwell."

"D'ye want me to go?" quoth Halliwell, agast.

"No, no. But be launching the boat, so as to let them see that we are obeying. Thus they will hold their fire. Take your time in doing it."

Halliwell picked out six or eight men for the task, and these reluctantly departed, stifling their curiosity to hear what de Bernis might have to propose, by what means it was in his mind to work this miracle he had promised them.

The Frenchman addressed himself particularly to Bundry, but spoke so that all might hear him.

"You are to remember that there is one thing that Morgan wants, and that he wants it desperately; one thing that he is seeking, one thing for which, in the name of the English Crown, he has offered five hundred pounds. That is what he offers. But if I know him at all, to secure that thing which so long he has coveted, he would pay even more; a deal more. It might be possible even to drive such a bargain with him as would secure the lives and liberty of all of us in exchange for that one thing. Fortunately we are in a position to offer him this to him so precious object. It is the head of Tom Leach."

Bundry sucked in his breath in surprise. He understood; but he was mistrustful. Not so the men; there was a stir among them, even a laugh or two. They perceived a grim humor in such a bargain as Monsieur de Bernis proposed to drive; an ingenious swindle, diverting to the rascals that were to profit by its perpetration; for Morgan was not to know that Leach was dead already.

And then Ellis, stepping forward, showed a difficulty.

"Aye, aye. That may well be. But who's to bear him that offer? Which of us would be safe in Morgan's lousy hands? I know the mangy old wolf of old. If any of us was to go to him with this, that would never return. Morgan'd hang him from a yardarm and demand Tom's head as well. That's if he'd consent to the bargain at all."

"He'll never consent," said Bundry, with sudden conviction. "Why should he? He has us all at his mercy. The old wolf'll ask unconditional surrender, and you should know it, de Bernis. Ye're a fool to think otherwise, and we're fools to listen to you."

There was a momentary start from de Bernis. But he recovered at once.

"Oh, maybe. But not because you listen. Are you so sure he has us at his mercy? What if we take to the woods? Will he dare to land a force and follow us? Has he no ambush to fear? And how long would he take to starve us into surrender?" He felt about him a revival of the hope which Bundry had momentarily damped. "What I propose may be a forlorn chance. Morgan may utterly reject it, as you fear. But at least let us try him with this bargain. Remember how desperately he covets the head of Tom Leach; in what danger he stands of disgrace with his Government until he gets it."

The men loudly insisting, Bundry was overcome. He shrugged. "Very well. But, as Ellis says, who's to bear that message? Which of us can trust himself in Morgan's hands? Unless we send Wogan. And, faith, why not? It's Wogan is to blame next to Leach for this situation."

"Me?" cried Wogan. "Rot you, ye swine, Bundry! Ye're as much to blame yourself!"

"I'm but a shipmaster, not a fighting seaman," Bundry answered him.

Monsieur de Bernis interposed. "Wait! Wait!" He half-turned and looked at Priscilla, who, with the Major's protecting arm about her waist, stood there aloof, with all the sense of living through an ugly, terrifying dream.

"There is my wife," he said. "Morgan does not make war on women. He never did, not even before he came to be Governor of Jamaica. Nor can he treat a woman as a buccaneer. She will be safe in his hands. Her brother and my servant Pierre will suffice to man the longboat and pull her out across the lagoon. That resolves the difficulty. She shall bear our message, our offer to Morgan: our lives and liberty, with freedom to depart from here in our ships, in exchange for the head of Tom Leach."

"Can ye hope he'll accept?" quoth Bundry, his beady dark eyes searching the calm face of the Frenchman.

"But why not?" He spoke confidently. "He looks upon Leach as the soul and brain of you all. It is his conviction that, if Leach were taken, this company would disband. Moreover, as I've said—and it is upon this I stake all—he fears that unless he can shortly report to the Government that he has made an end of Tom Leach, the Government may make an end of him."

There was some muttering and some considering among the men, some argument between Ellis and Bundry.

But whatever they considered, it certainly played no part in their deliberations whether Morgan would be as tender of Madame de Bernis as her husband hoped. If they thought he took too sanguine a view of that, they did not allow the thought to weigh. What mattered was that there was someone who would bear the message. What might afterwards befall her was purely the affair of de Bernis who had proposed it.

And so in the end it was even with a measure of gratitude, and a deal of admiration for the wit which had discovered this possible way of escape, that they urged de Bernis to put his plan into execution.

Miss Priscilla went down the beach to the boat which Halliwell's men had launched. She walked between Monsieur de Bernis and Major Sands, with Ellis and Bundry hanging on either flank, Pierre following at their heels, and a few of the buccaneers straggling after them; and she walked as she had walked in dreams, her mind clouded by a mist of unreality.

Few words had been employed. When the matter was settled between Monsieur de Bernis and the buccaneers, the Frenchman had stepped up to her.

"You have heard what is required of you, Priscilla?" he had said, and he was gently smiling at her.

She nodded. "I have heard," she said, and there checked, staring at him, her face blanched, deepest trouble in her clear eyes.

Gravely he answered that look: "You have nothing to fear, Sir Henry Morgan will treat you with consideration."

"I could not suppose that you would send me unless you were convinced of that," she answered bravely. Then she asked the question that revealed the real source of her fear. "But you?"

"His smile deepened a little. He shrugged. 'I am in the hands of Fate. I do not think he will treat me unkindly. It depends now upon you.'"

"Upon me?"

"Upon your bearing this message for us and upon how you deliver it."

"If that is really so; if this is really for your good, you can depend upon me indeed."

He inclined his head in acknowledgment.

"Come, then. We have no time to lose. The boat is ready. I will recite the message for you as we go." Thus they had set out, the Major silent, endeavouring to preserve a stolidity upon his broad florid countenance, least he should betray his surprise and satisfaction at beholding the opening of a door of escape from circumstances which to him had been intolerable as a nightmare.

As they went, Monsieur de Bernis gave her the terms of the message she was to deliver, and he desired Major Sands's attention to it also. They were simply to offer Morgan the head of Tom Leach, upon which he had placed the price of five hundred pounds, in exchange for the lives and freedom to depart, at their own leisure in their own ships, of all those now upon Maldiva. If more were needed, and as an earnest of their good faith and their intention to quit piracy, they would disarm the ships, and cast their guns into the sea under Morgan's eyes.

If Morgan would not agree these terms, then let him know that, abundantly supplied with provisions and ammunition, they would take to the woods, and if he chose to pursue them there, he would do so at his peril. In such circumstances, they would be in a position to hold out indefinitely.

At his request, she repeated the words after him, as did also Major Sands. Ellis and Bundry nodded their gloomy approval of the message, and so they came to the wet sand at the water's edge, where half-a-dozen men, knee-deep in the sea, held the long boat in readiness.

Halliwell offered to carry the lady to the boat, the Major and Pierre could wade for themselves.

But now Priscilla, white and trembling, turned suddenly fully to face de Bernis, and caught him by the arms above the elbow.

"Charles!" was all that she could say. "Charles!" But there was agony in her voice, a haunting fear in her eyes.

He bowed his tall uncovered head, and a smile of encouragement, sweet and rather wistful, irradiated the swarthy gloom of it.

"Child! I repeat, you have nothing to fear. Nothing, Morgan does not make war upon women."

There was a flash that was almost of anger from her eyes.

"Have you not yet understood that it is not for myself that I am afraid? Must you always think so meanly of me?"

The smile passed from his face; pain was reflected in it; his eyes, considering her, grew sad.

"Brave little soul..." he began, and there checked. He turned to Ellis and Bundry who stood by.

"Sirs, give us leave apart a moment. It is possible that I may never see her again."

STRONG WRESTLING CARD
BOOKED FOR THE ARENA

TRENTON, N. J., Mar. 24.—What is probably the strongest wrestling card ever presented at the Trenton Arena is slated for tonight. Promoter Dick Curley has secured the services of two former champions in finish events backed by an unusual card of four thirty-minute time limit matches.

Gus Sonnenberg, Dartmouth Dynamite, will pit his skill and aggressiveness against the rugged and sturdy Richard "Bull" Martin. Martin is a native of Trenton and is the premier heavyweight developed in Jersey. He and Sonnenberg drew $32,000 in a recent match in Boston.

Through his specialty of the successful application of the flying tackle, Sonnenberg thundered into the heavyweight championship of the world by disposing of Ed Strangler Lewis on four occasions. The bounding bull-frog of matland is one of the most spectacular grapplers in the game today.

Martin is an exponent of the Pier Six style of grappling and is most successful at the use of the rough-house style.

Richard Shikat, powerful German master of wrestling technique and conqueror of Jim London, faces the mysterious Canadian matman known as the "Red Devil." The "Devil" has amassed an amazing streak of wins on the local mat. He lost a decision to Sonnenberg and to Mike Mazurki but has never had his shoulders pinned to the mat.

Mayes McLean and Mike Mazurki meet in the feature 30 minute event that bids fair to steal the show away from the two star bouts. Both youngsters are considered championship timber and can ill afford to risk defeat.

Sam Cordevano, new Italian giant, and the most publicized grappler in the game today faces the rowdy Herb Brew, Herbie Freeman.

Paul Boesch and Steve Enosky, and Jack Riley and Jerry Monchan complete this sterling card.

OWING to the bad weather over the last week-end the pistol match between the Bristol and Burlington members of the Bristol-Burlington Rifle and Pistol Club was postponed, but will be held this Saturday and Sunday.

The match may be shot at the option of the members, either on Saturday at 2:30 o'clock or on Sunday morning at 10:30 o'clock. Arrangement can be made with Captain John E. Healey, of the Bristol team.

The following distances are fixed on the range:

15 yards—10 shots—slow fire
15 yards—10 shots—rapid fire
25 yards—10 shots—slow fire
25 yards—10 shots—rapid fire

Any calibre pistol may be used in the matches, so long as the distance between the front and rear sights are not more than 10 inches. The five high scorers of each team will represent their respective teams.

An invitation has been extended to those interested in this sport to join the club and shoot with one of the teams on Saturday or Sunday next.

Palermo's billiard rooms are the scene of some well-played pool games these days in the tournament being held there. W. Manera defeated Wm. Thompson 125 to 72 and Arthur Murphy beat Vito LaRosa by the score of 125 to 121.

No Hard-Boiled Enforcement
Of The 18th Amendment

unloosening of the Niagara of beer at one minute past midnight, April 6th, local time.

Local time everywhere is to be observed as the effective date of the new law. That cleared up, another controversial point arises as to whether the Pacific coast would not gain three hours of drinking time over the Atlantic coast.

"The West coast had a few hours' grace when the Volstead Act went into effect, so matters are evened up," said Cummings, with a smile.

What changes are to be made, if any, in the prohibition enforcement personnel have not been decided, Cummings indicated.

Colonel Woodcock is to continue in his post for the present, but it is expected, sooner or later, he will be supplanted.

Dr. J. N. Doran, chief of the Bureau of Industrial Alcohol, and chief enforcement officer prior to the transfer of enforcement to the Department of Justice, probably will continue. Doran has been in the treasury for many years. He is not regarded as a prohibition product, but rather a career officer.

Morrisville Red Cross
Prepares For Appeal

tion is made at regular intervals as the families need it.

A report was given that 929 articles had been made by the ladies of the local Red Cross from cotton furnished by the Red Cross headquarters.

The organization voted to continue to give the toxin anti-toxin treatment to the children. This will probably be given in May. An interesting report was given about the Red Cross card parties with Mrs. Una Malmstrom as chairman.

Announcement was made of the national convention of the Red Cross which will be held in Washington, the week of April 24. It is expected several Morrisville members will attend.

Several members of the local branch attended a meeting at the Southern Eastern Chapter in Philadelphia headquarters in Philadelphia yesterday where Dr. Kenneth E. Apple, of the University of Pennsylvania, spoke.

New Nazi Regime Plans
New Deal For Germany

launched into the task of uniting Germany under the banner of nationalism and repeated his warning to German Jews that they must support him.

No sooner had the new regime been installed than Dr. Guenther Gerecke, Reichs Commissioner for Unemployment, was placed under arrest. Capt. Herman Goering, Nazi minister without portfolio in Hitler's cabinet, declared Gerecke's detention was connected with alleged misappropriation of public funds.

Meanwhile, reports of agitation in the United States against the Nazi attitude toward Jews brought hot reports from Nazi newspapers and spokesmen.

The moves for protection of Jews launched in the United States were branded unjustifiable interference with German affairs.

Pointing out that in view of Hitler's electoral majority the word "revolution" was a figurative description of German developments, the Frankfurter Zeitung said:

"But the word revolution feeds the imagination, and imaginations have been working overtime outside Germany."

Bible Only Authority
For Spiritual Living

is no authority and no direction for moral and spiritual living other than the Bible.

The speaker went into detail as to the advance made along scientific lines, and told of personal experiences with patent lawyers, and how "up-to-the-minute" they are. "If we want to really be informed scientifically we must read a book not more than one year old," said the judge. "But there are no late books on morals. There has been no advance in such in 1900 years. There is no other source of information for fitting life for beyond the skies than God's own Word."

The fact that there is one difference between men, those who have the right slant on life, and those who do not, was stressed. As an illustration Judge Davis told of several of his experiences in criminal court, which stories brought tears to the eyes of more than one man. The chief emphasis of the address was the opportunity of men's Bible classes and Christian Brotherhood to change the slant of men's lives by personal contact. The judge told two most gripping and heart-moving accounts of two young men who would have been sent to prison for two long terms, but he saw good in them. The two were given another chance, their lives followed up by the judge personally, and as a result the two made good. "They were redeemed from lives of criminality by changing the slant of their lives."

In conclusion, Judge Davis told how his Bible Class grew from a group of 12 to have an average attendance now of 275. "There are no secrets, such can be done anywhere. All that is needed is for men interested enough and the will to work. There is no other way under heaven." The men were told that there are scores of men in Bristol who have the wrong slant on life. You must get them into the Bible Class, and through this into the church. It is so easy when men become personally interested and are willing to work. There's nothing that counts for more." The judge told that the most important work of his own life has been giving light as it is found only in Jesus Christ.

Hymn singing, a social hour and refreshments were also features of the affair.

Here are two fine action pictures of the Oxford and Cambridge crews in action as they prepared for their annual race, one of the greatest sporting events in Great Britain, ranking with the Derby and Grand National. The Oxford crew (top) reads: Thomson, bow; Mosley, Crum, Couchman, Hogg, Bankes, Elliott, Holdsworth, stroke, and Komrakul-Na-Nagara, coxswain. The Cambridge men are: Sambell, bow; Gilmore, Carbonell, Wyle, Sergel, Luxton, Fletcher, National.
